

Do you want to light the fire of learning in your students, especially those at risk and underserved? Are you frustrated that your efforts to help students with academic motivation, behavior and confidence have not increased retention, success and completion?
Then you should attend the FELI!

Five-Day Experiential Learning Institute (FELI)
Kapi'olani Community College
May 18 – May 22, 2015
8am-4pm

This unique, fast paced, activity-based institute allows you to experience a new kind of pedagogy and learn techniques for teaching to the affective domain. You will come away from this week with a new vision of what teaching and learning can be at a community college level and the tools to implement these ideas in your classroom or daily work. The FELI is designed for community college faculty, staff, and administrators and was the idea of Diego Navarro, a professor at Cabrillo College who wanted to help people transcend poverty through education.
